ENERGY EFFICIENCY – *May 2006 Energy Crisis! How Can We Take Control?

With today's increasing energy costs it is more important to consider carefully the running costs of public facilities. When building on ecologically sound principles it is necessary to consider all energy and water usage as potentially harmful to our environment. To overcome this problem in public services, monitoring and controlling the use of these utilities is vital.

Leisure Controls International helps the government sector to meet targets to conserve energy consumption. Many leisure centres have their sun beds, hair dryers, showers and lighting monitored and controlled by using simple coin, card or push button operated systems. Coin or push button operated hair dryers can help conserve energy by ensuring the dryer is turned off after use and not left running.

Some projects will also be eligible for grants to help with the costs of the installation. There are grants available from the government for installing energy efficient technology to help conserve energy and water supplies.

A typical example of sensible control of water usage is seen on the Purbecks at Burnbake campsite in Dorset, where the LCI LT3200 card timer is used to control showers in the toilet blocks. The cards are sold at a nominal price and ensure that only bona fide customers can use the showers and that the showers are not left running after use.

A wide variety of timers are available for use with almost all electrically operated systems and are easy to fit, providing confidence that the customer is doing all they can to help the environment at the same time as controlling their costs.
